Mapping Modi's New India: Performances and Challenges

Kamalakanta Roul
University of Delhi
April 6, 2022

My Objective and Argument

- Then, what is the true political nature of Modi's New India? Will Modi transform our country? Can Modi deliver on the promises that he made during general elections?
- My primary objective is to understand the nature of Indian state in the political regime of prime minister Narendra Modi.
- I will contemplate over the political transition and structural transformation of present India.
- To contextualise the socio-economic and political specificities, I will explore the formation and growth of the Indian state from post-colonial period to Modi's regime.
- I argue that Modi's idea of New India is a progressive move towards the structural transformation of India to build a 'developmental welfare state'.

New India and its Critique

- In August 2017, Prime Minister Narendra Modi tweeted, "Let us pledge to free India from poverty, dirt, corruption, terrorism, sectarianism, communalism and create a 'New India' of our dreams by 2027"
- Three Major Features
- A nation driven by innovation, hard work, creativity;
- a nation characterised by peace, unity, brotherhood, and
- a country free of corruption, terrorism, black money, and dirt.
- Critique of Modi's New India
- Social and Political Scientists say that Modi has transformed India into a "majoritarian state", "Hindu authoritarian state", "illiberal state", "ethnic democracy", "re-forming India" and "non-inclusive India".

The Nature of Indian State in Modi's Regime

- India's three developmental horizons: In August, 1947, there were political freedoms. In July, 1950, it gained economic liberty. In May 2014, with the election of Narendra Modi, the emerging Modi developmental dignity.
- Developmental India from 'soft state' (Modi) to 'development state' (Bibi Auzgi)
- India needs an effective state, with a greater capacity to act.
- Efficient government for speedy delivery of public services.
- Reforming state institutions and the economy.
- India's evolution into a middle class nation what Modi calls the "new middle class"
- Strategy for building New India
- First, development must become a mass movement.
- Second, to achieve broad based economy growth to ensure balanced development across all regions and states and across sectors.
- Third, to bridge the gap between public and private sector performance.

Abstract of the Lecture

Social and political scientists have been debating over and grappling with the idea of Modi's New India. Critics say that Modi has transformed India into a "majoritarian state", "Hindu authoritarian state", "illiberal state" "ethnic democracy", "re-forming India" and "non-inclusive India". Then, what is the true political nature of Modi's New India? Will Modi transform our country? Can Modi deliver on the promises that he made during general elections?

My primary objective is to understand the nature of Indian state in the political regime of prime minister Narendra Modi. I will contemplate over the political transition and structural transformation of present India. To contextualise the socio-economic and political specificities, I will explore the formation and growth of the Indian state from ancient period to Modi's regime. Since August, 2017, prime minister Narendra Modi has been urging for building a New India which will liberate people from acute poverty, nondevelopment, and frenzy of violence. Modi strives to enhance the state's capacity to act for which he has gone for overhauling, restructuring and reforming state institutions and the economy.

I will explore Modi's three major strategies for transforming India: uplifting the marginalised, distributed development and decentralised governance. I argue that Modi's idea of New India is a progressive move towards the structural transformation of India to build a 'developmental state'. Modi's developmental state is the hybridisation of two ideas: Gandhi's socialism and Ambedkar's liberal-democracy, and Golwalkar's social harmony and Upadhyaya's liberalism. In other words, the welfare politics and liberal economic policy have been merged together for the greater political transformation to build a developmental state called "Modi's New India".

New India and its Critique

- In August 2017, Prime Minister Narendra Modi tweeted, "Let us pledge to free India from poverty, dirt, corruption, terrorism, casteism, communalism and create a 'New India' of our dreams by 2022".
- Three Major Feature:
- A nation driven by innovation, hard work, creativity;
- a nation characterised by peace, unity, brotherhood; and
- a country free of corruption, terrorism, black money, and dirt.
- Critique of Modi's New India
- Social and Political Scientists say that Modi has transformed India into a "majoritarian state", "Hindu authoritarian state", "illiberal state" "ethnic democracy", "re-forming India" and "non-inclusive India".
